Absolutely takes a closer look at one stunning project by Hertfordshire-based NS Interior Design

Nestled in a quiet street of Northwood, North West London, this gated home underwent a transformation with building a side extension on the first floor to create a tailored Primary Suite. Neha Shah – founder of NS Interior Design – was appointed to create and design a space that optimised the definition of a “hotel style” look and feel.

Once the overall footprint was established with the architects, working closely with the clients, Neha created the perfect configuration that provided an open plan feel whilst providing four definitive areas: dressing table, bedroom, walk-in wardrobe and en-suite.

Neha wanted to create a main focal point as you entered the Primary Suite. Beginning with the bespoke dressing table area, she opted for a rich dark slatted screen layered with a classic circular mirror, accented with an LED glow behind. This area also included a floating dressing table with a marble effect top and antique brass trim accents.

Continuing the dark wood theme in the bedroom area, Neha opted for an oversized headboard in a grey faux textured leather with antique brass trim accents. This was completed with elegant fluted glass wall lights and bespoke bedsides.

Given that the wardrobe area was long and narrow, Neha maximised on the extensive ceiling height with a neutral profile door with rich wood inlay handles. This was accented with a bespoke smoked glass door to the centre to showcase the client’s designer handbags. To complete this space, she opted for smoked mirror panels and LED tape lighting in key areas.

Continuing the hotel inspired theme in the main en-suite, Neha made a choice on using oversized large format tiles that had a subtle marble movement and veining running through. This was paired with the consistent theme of LED glow lighting, antique brass detailing and black finished sanitary ware.

This project was provided with a full service including Spatial Planning, Interior Design and Design Management.
